SETTLERS AND BANNOCKS

New Proof That the Shooting Was Deliberate Murder.

NO EXCUSE FOR THE DEED

Letter Dictated by a Bannock Indian Woman to the "White Woman Chief" Gives Sickening Details of the Outrage by Settlers at Jackson's Hole.

Marysme Ranch, Jackson Lake, Wyo., Aug. 21.—Added proof that the troubles at Jackson's Hole were the result of a cruel outrage upon the Bannock Indians, and not of an uprising against the whites by that small band of red men, is furnished by Mrs. John D. Sargent, wife of the famous Yellowstone Park guide.

Mrs. Sargent, whose home for years has been on the shores of the lake, has just arrived here after traveling without escort for a week nearly the whole length of the valley, some fifty miles. She says she is confident that there has not been an Indian in Jackson's Hole all summer.

"The scare was precipitated," she says, "by the reckless cruelty of the Jackson's Hole hunters, who, in the month of July, found hunting in violation of the Wyoming law. These deputies went into Hoback Basin, fifty miles beyond the jurisdiction of the Jackson's Hole justice of the peace, who deputized them. They surprised and arrested a camp of Bannocks, started back with their prisoners to Jackson's Hole, and when the Indians attempted to escape they were shot down."

Mrs. Sargent says that the Bannocks have great respect for the treaty between themselves and the government of Washington, and says that they cannot understand how it is that Wyoming law can prevent them from hunting game, when the treaty stipulates that the white settlers in Jackson's Hole have no respect for the game laws of Wyoming which they would force the Indians to have, as is evidenced whenever they get a "dude" hunting party from the East, who will pay a good price for good sport.

"WHITE WOMAN CHIEF." New York, Aug. 21.—Mrs. Harriet Maxwell Converse has received a letter from the Jackson's Hole region, addressed to her as "The White Woman Chief," and written by a friend, at the dictation of a Bannock Indian woman. The Indian woman speaks for the remnant of her tribe in a most pathetic manner, and graphically describes the shooting of the Indians in Jackson's Hole.

"There is not one word of truth in the report about the Bannocks going on the war path," writes this woman. "There are no more friendly people than they are. If they were not they would not have permitted the 'pale faces' to kill their people without having avenged the outrage. During the scare they could have killed every white person at Jackson's Hole and gone back to their reservation before any outside help could have come to the rescue."

"It has always been the custom of the Indians to go on the hunt before they begin their haying. They do not get enough weekly supplies from the Government to last one day, so they must lay in provisions. This year the Indian farms have fair for good harvest, but the whites took all the water from them, and now their crops are drying up. The Bannock Indians wish to know what the White Woman Chief, who lives 'where the sun gets up,' thinks about them."

A BAD PLACE. "I would say that Jackson's Hole is the meeting place for all sorts of bad men. One of the men who captured and shot the Bannocks was a well-known horse thief. Here is the story of Wanina, the mother of Nemart, a Bannock Indian, who was out with the hunting party that was fired upon by the posse of deputies, and who saw her boy shot."

"The white men were seen in the evening before, but as we had done nothing wrong, none of us were alarmed. We were out hunting, and every one of us, and nobody would ever know what became of us, but that if we ran away some one of us would get back to the agency and tell the story."

A BOY SHOT. "So, when we got near the big timber, my boy, Nemart, stood near me and told me to ride ahead, as we were near the place where the Indians were all going to break for liberty. That was the last word I ever heard my boy speak. My boy was the first one shot. We all ran, and the white men kept on shooting at us. None of our people had guns. One of our old men was deaf, and did not know what was going on. When we ran he was behind. One white man held his horse and another one killed him. One Indian woman, who was running, dropped her baby, one month old, and it was killed. One little boy, 2 years old, was lost, and we thought him killed, but some one found him and took him to another agency."

"Why we should be killed we do not know. We had nothing but good feeling in our hearts for the white men. We were hungry for some meat, and we went to hunt for it. The Great Spirit gave us deer long before the white man ever saw this land. When the white man came and wanted our country we made a big talk, and our father in Washington told us we could hunt the deer as long as the game lasted. We never stopped the white man from hunting for something else. Why is he so mean to us?"

"The Indians were wild with fright when the troops came," Mrs. Converse's correspondent adds. "They were told that the troops would kill all the Indians and open the reservation to the whites."

SUCK FOR MAINTENANCE. Martha E. Diggs, colored, wife of Charles W. Diggs, a messenger at the National Museum, brought suit for maintenance against her husband this morning. They were married July 23, 1886, and four children have since been born. The wife charged her husband with deserting her two years ago, and has since refused her support. During the severe weather of last winter she said she had to beg food from the station house and depended on the charity of friends.

HIS DEED VALID.

Judge Cole Renders a Decision in the Starr Case.

Judge Cole this morning delivered his opinion in the case of William M. Starr, the herb doctor, against Marshall A. A. Wilson. He granted a restraining order, preventing the marshal from deciding away certain property belonging to Starr until it can be decided in a court of equity whether the marshal has the right to make a legal deed to the property.

Collier C. Frayer, in 1879, entered into a number of contracts with the Government for the carrying of mail over certain routes. Dr. Starr and George P. Mason went on his bond. Frayer sublet a number of the contracts.

The subcontractors were in default in the execution of their contract, and in 1883 the Government brought suit against Frayer and his bondmen. Frayer was dropped from the case in 1885, but Dr. Starr's counsel contended that there was no reason for his dismissal.

Three years later a judgment by default was rendered against Mason and Starr. No execution was levied from 1889 to 1895. Then it was learned, it is said, that Dr. Starr had property of his own.

The property was immediately attached and the marshal delivered a temporary deed of sale to the government, the only bidder. The possession of the property, held that the execution on the judgment secured back in 1888 was invalid because it was not levied and renewed within the first and each subsequent year, and a day after the judgment.

Judge Cole held that concerning, however, that the government cannot be imputed with laches and that fact would not bar the marshal from completing the execution. A deed the marshal would make would not therefore be void, he held. His ability might, however, on the fact that the government was said to have agreed to dismiss the contractors and hold the sub-contractor liable.

CRUSHED UNDER A POLE.

Little Charlie Renner's Back Broken While at Play.

Charles G. Renner, the fifteen-year-old son of Stephen F. Renner, a workman at the union depot in Georgetown, was seriously injured yesterday afternoon while playing on the towpath above the Aqueduct bridge by a base-roofed telephone pole falling across his back. Eddie Renner, his brother, and William Barker, a playmate, were also knocked down, but were not badly hurt.

The boys had been playing hide and seek, and the pole was base. They evidently pushed it around in their game and loosened it, and while they were all crowded around the base one of them saw it topple over. He shouted a warning to his playmates, but too late to enable young Renner to get out of the way.

He was taken to the Emergency Hospital after the accident, where it was found that he was horribly cut about the lower portion of the back and his left knee dislocated. It is feared that he has sustained internal injuries.

Inquiry at the Emergency Hospital today developed the fact that Renner is resting easily, and hopes are entertained for his recovery.

OPENED THE CAMP MEETING.

Epworth League's Turn Out in Force at Washington Grove.

Washington Grove was dressed in its best holiday attire yesterday when for the twenty-third time it welcomed the annual gathering of members of the Methodist Church on the famous equipment grounds. The services will continue ten days in the handsome temple that forms the nucleus around which the little village is built.

As has been the custom for the past few years the opening session was known as Washington's District Epworth League's Day. The morning was spent in picnicking and pleasurable pastimes. A children's meeting and junior rally at 3 o'clock in the afternoon formed the opening services. Rev. H. B. Leech was in charge of the meeting.

A special train at 7:45 o'clock brought an additional number of League members from Washington. Mrs. R. M. Mickle directed the music at the evening meeting.

An excellent address on the "Essentials of Religion" was made by Rev. William Raymond Stricklin, president of the Baltimore Conference Epworth League. Rev. L. B. Wilson, presiding elder, conducted a consecration meeting at the close of the other exercises, thus concluding the day's services.

BUILDINGS MUST GO.

Inspector Brady Begins Suit Against Rev. McMahon.

Suit was entered to-day in the police court against Rev. James McMahon, the owner of several lots located on the north side of Washington Circle, to compel the removal of the old frame buildings there, the same having been inspected and condemned as unfit for occupancy and dangerous to life and limb.

The suit was brought by the building inspector, who has served notice upon Mr. McMahon several times since the buildings were first condemned. The last service was about sixty days ago, and no attention having been paid to either notice, and the owner declining to have the buildings torn down, as directed, the action of the inspector was taken as the only remaining remedy.

Drove Them In-doors.

The lawn party held last evening at the Keller Memorial Church in Northeast Washington will be repeated this evening. On account of the threatening aspect of the weather it was deemed advisable to adjourn to the church building, but this evening the large lawn on Eighth street, between F and G streets northeast, will be used unless the weather should again compel the use of the Church at Maryland avenue and Ninth street.

FUNERAL OF MRS. KEY.

The remains of Mrs. Anna Key were interred yesterday at Oak Hill Cemetery, Rev. Dr. Wood, of St. John's Church, officiating. The deceased was of the historic Key family, being the surviving daughter of Philip Barton Key, of Woodley, and sister of Philip Barton Key, who was shot by Daniel E. Sickles in 1868.

TRIED TO DROWN HIMSELF.

Thomas Adler of Anacostia, attempted suicide by jumping from Benning Bridge into the Eastern Branch last Monday evening. He was rescued by some men who heard his cries. The man when rescued would give no reason for his act.

STONE THROWING LADS

They Were Among the Offenders in the Police Court.

Nine Worthies Who Slept in a Freight Yard and Other Vaga Devils posed.

There was an unusually large number of juvenile offenders in the dock in Judge Scott's court this morning, and their youthful propensities for throwing stones was what got most of them into trouble.

The first boy, charged with breaking a window, was Richard Johnson, and Henry Wah was the complainant. A cross-eyed Chinaman who figured in the former Chinese case appeared to act as interpreter, saying that his friend could not speak English. Through the interpreter Wah stated that the boy entered his laundry and tried to get in his money drawer, and after he chased him out the would-be purloiner of coin threw a stone through the window all of which the boy denied.

"Are you sure this is the boy?" asked the court.

"Yes," answered Wah in English a little better than the interpreter used; "he run out and throw a stone through my glass."

"Take his personal recognizances," said Judge Scott, and Richard was released. Harry Alexander was also charged with throwing missiles, and the policeman had a small stone as evidence, but Harry declared that another boy had thrown it.

"What stone did you throw, then?" asked Mr. Fugate.

"I never throw'd nary one," answered Harry.

The boy's mother was in court and she was called.

"Will you take this boy home and give him a whipping if I let him off?" asked Judge Scott.

"Yes, indeed, I will, and a good one, too," answered the mother, vehemently.

The youthful prisoner was evidently more afraid of his mother's wrath than of the court, for he went blubbering from the room.

William Johnson, Edward Williams, William Smith, Henry Williams, William Lawrence, George Johnson, Henry Armstrong, and William Bayler were all arrested on a charge of vagrancy. They were all caught asleep in the freight yard of the Richmond and Danville railroad, and failing to give a satisfactory account of themselves were arrested. Edward Williams, William Smith, and William Lawrence were dismissed, and the rest were sent down for thirty days.

Mary Reynolds was charged with vagrancy by a policeman who found her asleep on a step on Marion street. Mary declared that she worked at the National Hotel and was on her way home when she sat down to rest.

"I live in Burk's alley," Judge, you knows where Burk's alley is, don't you?"

"No, I don't," replied the court. "Take her personal bonds to keep out of such trouble." And Mary walked out.

Mr. Ballinger, stable boss of the Belt Line railroad, was charged by Humane Officer Rabbit with cruelty to animals in allowing a horse to be driven to a car while it was lame, and interfered. He was fined $5.

Error in the Deed.
